

Doing it the way the Australians do it

TOSS another crocodile on the barbie.

A company from mid Essex is being featured on national television to show how barbecuing is done Australian style.

The Aussie BBQ company is run from Danbury by husband and wife team Jennet and Dwayne Watkin.

It is a catering company specialising in spit roasts and barbecues.

Jennet explained: "We were contacted by a researcher for ITV's This Morning programme who found us on the website.

"The idea of the programme is to show different barbecue ideas from around the world."

The couple went to Staffordshire to film the item which will be broadcast on Thursday.

Jennet said her husband Dwayne, who is Australian, is the chef. Crocodile and kangaroo were on the menu.

Jeannet said presenter of the item Alison Hammond, who was in Big Brother, said she preferred the kangaroo, but couldn't get around the idea of eating crocodile.

"It was good fun and we really had a great time."
